THE BROKEN COIN

By EMERSON HOUGH.

Frederick left him to continue his urried search in the confused freight-ge of the ship's hold. At last ne found age of the ship's hold. At last ne found that which he sought.

She tried feebly to raise herself as she heard footstops, heard a voice she knew to be that of her friend. Even she smiled as he bent above ner. Her indomitable heart still beat. Her mind still functioned with some balance in spite of the injuries she had sustained.

"Mademoiselle—thank God!" was all Count Frederick could say.

"It is you then?" was her reply.

"What has happened? Why are you here?"

re?"
"I am here my dear mademoiselle, the justice of the immortal gods—save you—to care for you. I heard the plot against you. My own boat a alongside—I have come. I am here wish. Come then, let us nasten. There is scant time."

They all crowded now to the ladders up from the held, and, rapidly as they might, found their way back to the upper deck. There came confusion, noise, trampling, shouts, sounds not ordinary at this stage of the voyage of a vessel putting out to sea. The passengers themselves suspected zomething to be wrong. They crowded now about the captain excitedly, expostulating. The master of the ship pushed them aside.

these were added now the far more numerous cries of those in mortal terror.

Obedient to their orders for a time, the crow held to their posts. The boats were lowered one after another. Yet into each there piled a senseless mass of packed humanity, overcrowding and rendering it useless as it reached the surface of the sea. Some hasty hand cut the hope below the davits just as one boat was launching, and those who had crowded into it were spilled like so many insects into the sea. One were fluing astic, the thought of the boat's funnishinus came to none. Each of these human units thought but of his ewn life, nor had respect for the life, or had respect for the life of any other. The full terror of the worst of accidents at sea was here.

Children and women and strong men fought now for a place in the last of the boats. Discipline broke and failed. What had been a happy party of the chivalry of civilized men held for the chivalry of civilized men held for but a little time. The cry of "women first" was raised no more. It was "Sauve out peut."

'Its arms supporting Kitty on one side, those of Releau on the other, count Frederick did his best to reach the roil. I selves, honeless! They were forced back time and again.

"Jump!" cried Frederick at last.

"Jump: We will swim for it. We must take the last chance."

The look on the face of the girl at his side was one in part of despair, but more bot trust. Unhesitating the three sprang together.

The sea closed over them. They rose sprang together.

The sea closed over them. They rose after an agonizing instant which seemed death itself—rose but to see the glant ship which had carried them raise her bows aloft, shiver, and tremble, and slowly slide back and down beneath the waves. In the whirlpool which marked the spot they were but little you marked the spot they were but little you marked the spot they were but little you might among scores and hundreds of others. Way!" cried Frederick, and he and Roleau aided Kitty to a foating and strungling men, of wailing women, of failing arms and beating flats, Frederick she had gone, they knew not where, in that chaos of the sea.

"Where is she?" demanded Frederick she had gone, they knew not where, in that chaos of the sea.

"Where is she?" demanded Frederick she had gone, they knew not where, in that chaos of the sea.

"Where is she?" demanded Frederick she had gone, they knew not where, in that chaos of the sea.

"Where is she?" demanded Frederick she had gone, they knew not where, in that chaos of the sea.

"Where is she?" demanded Frederick weakly, himself well-sigh spent. "They swam about for a time in search, but could not make out the wherealouts of her whom they sought. At least they found themselves one on each side of a floating spar and rested.

"Allow me, excellency." said Roleau, and flung across the end of his belt. "Let us lash fast. I cannot hold much." "Now, then," said he, "we have done." "Now, then," said he, "we ha verdict of both physical and mental incompetence.

Quabba parted with Esther at Sanakey's stables, and he put up pony. Monkey's atables, and he put up pony. Monkey and cart. Thither Luke Lovell had stealthily follwed. Just previous to their arrival, an automobile had turned futo the stable yard. Out of it leaped four men, who disappeared inside. The acrobat and the manuser of Suntley's circus led the search party for the diamond, abetted by the sherin and police officer.

Meanwhile, in a left overhead, Sankey was vainly trying to locate the place where he hastily had hidden the jewel beneath the hay. Giving it up at last, he deaccuded the ladder. Suddenly he paused, all but blinded. There, between him and the daylight—gleaming like a star—dangled from the hayrack over the pony's empty stall, the Diamond from the Sky! Sankey grasped the gen.

The next instant the officers and the circus men were upon him. Quabba and Luke, coming into the stable yard, were just in time to witness the struggle for the necklace. Next day all the papers had the story. The famous hericiom was to be sold at sheriff's auction as an asset of the Santley circus, now bankrupt.

Homer Gravdon read the news. The aged millionaire determined to use the event as a decoy for Vivian Marsen, Vivian had neglected him shamefully since that evening in the cafe when she first had caught sight of the young cil king. In the park where she met him by secret appointment, he repreached her.

"But." chuckled the old bon vivant. "If you'll be a good girl from now on, and sive un these old friends' of yough. (Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.)
A feud exists between Colonel Stanley and Judge Stanley, wealthy Virginians, over "The Diamond From the Bky," a jewel found centuries ago in a fallen meteer. To deceive his coustn, Colonel Stanley buys a sypsy baby boy, but the gypsy mother, Higgar, steals the diamond and Colonel Stanley's daughter, Esther, Blair Stanley, the judge's son, murders. The colonel's son (the gypsy changeling) the colonel's son (the gypsy changeling) fights a duel with Blair, seless the jewel and fices. The image aperformance, just as the woman's pet lion and turned against her and clawed her to death, seizing in its bloody claws the great diamond. In the horrified crowd, out in different parts of the circus, were Eather, Arthur, listr. Vivian war for the circus, were Eather, Arthur, listr. Vivian and states an attempt and falls.

Such is the power of suggestion upon a drug-weakened mind, that day by day. Arthur was slipping further and further into the toils of Durand, Vivian, and Blair. The eccentricities which John Powell had developed since his injury in the mountains were goossin on many tongues. Whispers of the "the solden man's" disordered mind were bruited abroad. He was referred to everywhere as "the wind millionaire."

Esther heard these rumors and instinctively dishelieved them. Simictively dishelieved them, so was for Arthur, she was convinced now of her powerlessness to help him. I 'tterly discouraged, and sick at heart, only the consolations of Quabba, as they nodded along beside the pony plane cert after the cruelly disappointing indicent on the road home from the horse show kent Eather from completely giving way to despair.
